Exercised. That in the present time to the family, M. Badinots, causes letters to miscarry, and in various ways involves the galiant Philippe in difficulties from which he cannot extricate himself. The most serious of these is, that old Madame Mongérard is led to believe he's really fascinated by her meture charms, and readily lends horself to the supposed firstation. Philippe is magnanimous enough to admire his conqueror for the raddress, and learning suddenly that she is a widow, which he had not before imagined, he experiences a change of heart and transfers his suit. He moreover takes pains to present Gaston's case so favorably to the young girl's annt as to scenare her consent to their union. He near entreats his millitary friend to their union. He near entreats his millitary friend to source him in a similar way with the widow. This Gaston agrees to do, but with a reductance he cannot at fairned. This new complication ton agrees to do, but with a reluctance he cannot at first explain to himself. Presently, however, he discovers that he has been in love with Madame Doley all along without knowing it. This new complication (which is, by the by, the weakest part of the plot) is eleared by the reasumption of Philippe's original intension and a happy betrothal on all sides.
